Companionship the Requisite.

To the Filter.

There is no need of "management" where love exists, and where there is no love all the management in the world would effect nothing. Man expects happiness in his home life, and the loving wife knows well how to supply that luxury not by artiface but by honest, open and womanly methods.

She need not tell him of her petty trials because he will discover them of his own accordand share them willingly. No slave to him should she be—and a true man would not allow it—but a true wife sharing his pleasures, taking oride in his advancement, soothing him in sorrow and givings him the warmth and kindred-loving fellowship for which he sought her.

When disputes arise she should, if convinced of right, maintain her point, for when the argument has passed the husband will respect her all the irone.

Husband and wife are grown too old to play at children in schemes and artiface to maintain the marriage bond. Shame to the wife compelled to "teed," wear bangs, frills and paint to hold him. There should be perfect frankness and honesty, and the wife to "manage" her husband must first love him. Dor.
